

Acknowledgement

This thesis exemplifies more than just a study, but an era within my life, encompassing six years that was forged by vast experiences and influences of mentors, academic environment, family, friends, and society in general. In long-term research such as doctoral research, which is developed over a period of many years, one acquires unavoidably extensive individual and institutional debts. Over a period of six years, the list of individuals who have contributed in one way or the other to the completion of the thesis is very long and the emotional and intellectual debts are even more extensive. It would be injustice if I do not mention my incredible colleagues who traveled this journey with me. Many people kept me in their prayers throughout the process of doing doctoral research and without a doubt; I know that their prayers have contributed to my success. I attribute my success to the never-ending support of all of the extraordinary people who listened to me, guided and supported me. Without their contributions and sincere concern for quality doctoral research, I would have never completed this achievement.

I am particularly grateful to Professor Shagufa Kapadia, my research guide, for her support and guidance not only in helping me create this work, but also for contributing greatly to my professional and personal growth. She always pushed me while I was writing this PhD thesis and challenged me to think through the process. Her wisdom and charisma made the research process rewarding and has been truly memorable. I would also like to thank Professor and Department Chair, Rajlakshmi Sriram for her most valuable and trenchant critiques of my work that were offered in a manner that always left me feeling validated and supported. She was the first teacher to introduce and teach me grounded theory in her research methods class. I was impressed with her knowledge on various qualitative research methodologies and mastery over qualitative research analysis.

A special thanks is extended to Professor Richard Parker and Professor Jennifer Hirsch, for professional guidance and sparing time from her very busy schedule to review doctoral research proposal and giving scope for improvement and encouragement during my Fulbright visit at Mailman School of Public Health, Columbia University of the New York City, New York. I appreciate Professor Craig Shealy and Professor Henrique Gregg from James Madison University, USA for their efforts to plan and coordinate my visit at James Madison University (JMU), Virginia. The visit helped me improve present doctoral research by interacting with doctoral students, expert faculty members and accessing of JMU's library.

I thank my friends and colleagues for ongoing conversation, for their time and patience in reading and commenting various installments of PhD thesis drafts, and for their prompt willingness to help me. While they are no way responsible for whatever failings remain in the thesis, they have all contributed centrally to whatever is of value. I thank my friend Ms. Namita Bhatt for her selfless help in accomplishing some official tasks at the M. S. University while I was in the USA, unflagging enthusiasm to share her experience of writing PhD thesis and provide feedback as well as tips on formatting of the PhD thesis as per APA style; Dr. Jigisha Gala, Ms. Kiran Lakhani, Ms. Tripti Kathuria and Ms. Asmita Naik who each contributed greatly in providing feedback on different aspects of my research and provided insightful editing for which I am very grateful. Thanks to all my colleagues and friends for their friendship and the great memories that were created together. True friends are treasures from God and I am truly blessed!

My special thanks to the faculty staff members, Ms. Aarti and Ms. Kirti for their timely informing me about the UGC fellowship procedures and formalities. Thanks to the staff of the Department of Human Development and Family Studies namely Mr. Mukesh Gajjar, Technical Assistant; Mr. Mahendra Sonavane, Clerk; Mr. Chandrakant Solanki, and Mr. Pankaj Solanki, Office Assistants who always supported me with any departmental work.

I would like to thank all participants who volunteered to participate in the research. Without their contributions, the research project would have never been materialized. The eloquence and poignancy with which they engaged in reflexive explorations of their experiences amazed, yet did not surprise, me. Their voices opened my eyes to certain counseling experiences and counselors' perspectives to which I was previously blind.

A heartfelt thanks goes to:

- University Grants Commission (UGC), New Delhi for giving me prestigious award of Research fellowship under Basic Science Research-Research Fellowship in Sciences for Meritorious Students (BSR-RFSMS), which has contributed greatly for successful completion of the study.
- United-State India Education Foundation (USIEF), New Delhi under the Education, and Cultural Affair Department, United States of America for awarding me Fulbright-Nehru

Doctoral and Professional Research Fellowship that significantly contributed to present doctoral research and influenced my professional and personal life.

- Gujarat State AIDS Control Society, an autonomous body of the Department of Health and Family Welfare, Government of Gujarat, for granting permission to collect data from TI NGOs, providing financial support to collect data; however, the financial support was not used, and considering me a resource persons to provide technical support to targeted interventions in the State.

I would like to thank my parents, Dr. Bharat Pandya and Smt. Raksha Pandya, for encouragement and love that they have consistently given to me throughout my life. I would also like to thank my younger brother Dr. Kartik Pandya (PhD) and my sister-in-law Mrs. Arpita Pandya who always kept me grounded and made me laugh throughout this entire process. Dr. Kartik provided insightful editing from outsiders perspective which improved the quality of PhD thesis and I am forever grateful to him. A big thanks to our youngest member of my family, Vritti Pandya who completed my brother's life and made him proud father and me an uncle.

On the same line, I record my special thanks to my in-laws, Mr. Lalit Pandya & Mrs. Neeta Pandya for their encouragement. I remember my younger sister-in-law Ms. Riddhi Pandya who is sincerely preparing for Chartered Accountant's exam, which particularly impressed me. It reminded me to remain focused and consistent.

I thank to all participants who participated in this research and shared their day to day counseling practices, innermost thoughts and experiences with me, which made this thesis a reality.

Finally, it is my wife, Siddhi Pandya, who I would like to thank the most. She struggled to make sense of the many ways in which my personal and professional journeys have sometimes negatively affected her life as she had to pursue a job and sacrifice many of her many needs to financially and emotionally contribute to the survival of the family while my fellowship stipend was irregular, for which I am profoundly sorry. It is my hope that, in time, she will appreciate how commitments to one's self and to one's family are often not fully compatible, but I must honor her in an effort to become a better wife. As we were both aware about the long-term doctoral research process, she extended her support both at times when I needed them and at times when I selfishly wanted them. I am forever grateful to her. Thank you Siddhi for cheering me on, believing in me, and loving me. I want you to know how truly thankful I am to have you in my life.

All contributed in different ways to make it possible to complete PhD thesis. Everyone's support in completing this journey, their kindness, and commitment to excellence continue to inspire me.

Apurvakumar Pandya