

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

My greatest debt is to my guide, Prof. M.M. Dadi (also the Head, department of Economics and Dean, Faculty of Arts). At every stage of development of this thesis I had to run for his help and was never disappointed. Despite his busy schedule, he spared time to go through this an otherwise bulky manuscript several times. His comments and suggestions on earlier drafts have been of immense value in improving the quality of the thesis. But for his critical comments, keen interest and encouragement, the study would have suffered on many counts. What I owe him is beyond description. I am also grateful to Prof. V.N. Kothari for his incessant encouragement and for his personal interest and care. At one time or another and more so in the department's research workshops, I had the benefit of very fruitful discussions with him which clarified many doubtful and obscured points. I am also grateful to Professors pirzada Saheb, M.S. Trivedi, G.S. Gupta and Tushaar Shah for their academic help and for guiding my thoughts throughout the development of the study. My brother Kiran has always been conspicuous by his advice, inspiration and valuable criticism. I owe much to him, especially for expediting my work and for seeing it through the final completion. At various occasions, I have received invaluable help of academic nature from my teachers and now senior colleagues Professors N.M. Pandya, Mrs. M.N. Shah and Mrs. L.A. Rede. I am grateful to all of them. The major help for the computer work was rendered by Mr. Bansal, Mr. Padaria, Mr. B.C. Patel, Subba Rao and Ashir. Their help is acknowledged with thanks. I am also thankful to Mr. Dinesh Bhatt and Mr. M.P. Master for typing the thesis quite efficiently.

Final thanks go to my wife, suramya, whose support in the form of preparing bibliography and arranging the thesis in order has been extraordinary. She deserves substantial credit for anything that I have managed to accomplish in this thesis. Thanks are also due to my sister-in-law for her kind encouragement.

However, this thesis is mine, and so there is only one source of such undetected errors and omissions as remain, and that is
