

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I wish to thank a number of individuals and institutions for their help which I received while carrying out this work. First, I extend my profound gratitude to my teacher and guide Professor Pravin J. Patel for his expert mentorship, and tolerance, during various stages of this work.

In addition, I am also thankful to professor Ghanshyam Shah, Director, Centre for Social Studies, South Gujarat University, for the consultancy service he rendered to me in 1994. Mr. Muse Wanasakaami, Research Coordinator, Office of the President, Republic of Kenya, also deserves special thanks for ensuring that the permit for data collection was provided promptly.

I am deeply indebted to the Kenyan Ministry of Education, the Nakuru Municipal Education Department, and my teacher - respondents for their valuable cooperation.

I am also grateful to my friends and well-wishers, particularly Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Bor in Nakuru; Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Mugenik in Longisa; A. Mosonik, E. Malel, D. Bett, J. Korir, L. Kangogo, J. Mutai, and Dr. Chepkwony, all lecturers at Egerton University Njoro; not forgetting Edwin Ngetich and Richard Mutai in Nairobi; for their words of encouragement, and valuable assistance during my field-work. At Baroda, I duly acknowledge the company of Mr. and Mrs. John Mirara, P. Korir, and P. Awando during data-coding. I also appreciate the useful statistical comments by Dr. Biswal, and the typing services of Mr. Ajay Parmar.

Indeed, I express my deepest gratitude, with honour and respect, to my beloved parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Tonui, for their tireless upbringing, financial sacrifice, and continuous prayers throughout my stay in India at the cost of their comfort and pleasure.

Last, but not least, I owe a debt of gratitude to my wife Rodha C. Bor, who endured lonely moments while I was abroad. Without her patience, prayers, and support this work would probably not have been completed.
