

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

My interest to study certain problems pertaining to fertiliser industry developed while I was working in a small and newly established research centre, in Bombay, known as 'The Bombay Research Centre'. A few visits of Professor S.R. Hashim to that centre brought me in close touch with him.

I am unable to account for what I owe to Professor S.R. Hashim under whose guidance I have completed this study. In the course of this study, I have availed much of his time and intellectual resources. His sheer interest in this study and constant encouragement kept on igniting my enthusiasm.

The prevalence of research oriented atmosphere in the Department and, liberal facilities provided to the researchers of the Department, were of great help to me. The Department provided research assistantship in the I.P.C.L. Centre and for that I did not avail the short term fellowship which the ICSSR had granted to me. For all these, I am highly grateful to Professor V.N. Kothari, the Head of Department. I am also grateful to Professor M.M. Dadi, Dr. (Mrs.) M.N. Shah and Dr. (Mrs.) L.A. Rede with whom I had fruitful discussions.

The base of this study was founded in the library of the Fertiliser Association of India, at its regional office in Bombay. I am grateful to the FAI staff for allowing me to become the member of their library. I am also grateful to the Ministry of Fertilisers and Chemicals as well as the Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation for providing the necessary data, required for this study.

The computation of data would have become much difficult without the use of computer. I am highly thankful to the staff of the University Computer Centre, especially Miss. Jayashree R. Purandare who prepared a programme for me and also helped me in the course of computation.

Mr. P. Yousuf and Mr. V.D. Shah kept aside their research work while helping me in the proof reading of this thesis. I am grateful to them for this. I am thankful to Mr. C.N. Kachhia for typing the thesis neatly. I am also grateful to other staff members and my colleagues in the Department and, all others who helped me directly or indirectly in many ways.

Baroda,
