Pursuing a doctoral program can be trying in many ways; and achieving a transient conclusion, in the form of the doctoral dissertation, would not be possible without the support, guidance and encouragement of few. This doctoral dissertation would not have been possible without such few in this journey of mine, who I must acknowledge.

I would like to express my sincere gratitude and appreciation to my Ph.D. supervisor, Professor Lajwanti Chatani. Professor Chatani has seen me grow as a scholar through the years, and has guided and taught me much that I know of the discipline. She has nurtured my academic growth, particularly through her scholarly engagements on the area of research. Her knowledge on the issue of justice is substantive, and this thesis would not have been possible without her guidance. I thank her for her unfailing support.

I thank Professor Prafulla C. Kar, Director, Centre for Contemporary Theory and Balvant Parekh Centre for General Semantics & Other Human Sciences, Vadodara, for his insightful comments and words of encouragement, and more, for providing me an excellent opportunity for learning and reading while I worked as an Academic Associate at the Centre. These were the crucial years of my Ph.D. research, and the environment at the Centre enriched my research by broadening my perspective.

I will remain indebted to Smt. Hansa Mehta Library and the Library at the Center for Contemporary Theory for their rich collections of books and journals, without which my research would have been impossible. I thank all the distinguished scholars I met during my research with whom I had discussions, and which stimulated my research.

This thesis would not have been possible without the unfailing support of my family: my parents – Ghanshyam Sharma and Hemlata Sharma, and my brother – Rajendra Sharma. Their support encouraged and helped me to complete this academic journey. A special word of gratitude to my mother from whom I learnt honesty, empathy, kindness, love, ethics, morality, and the idea of being just. All that is good in me belongs to her.
