
ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The present study of psychological theories in ancient Indian medicine, though modern in nature is also in conformity with the Hindu tradition of reverence for the teacher and the science. It is with this attitude of mind that I thank Prof.L.J.Bhatt,Dean, Faculty of Education and Psychology,M.S.University of Baroda,Baroda. It is entirely due to his guidance that this thesis is completed in time.

It was the foresight of the Vice-Chancellor Dr.C.S. Patel that could recognize at once the significance of this subject. I am indebted to him for its acceptance as a doctoral study in psychology. His keen interest in the subject and kind inquiries from time to time about the progress of the thesis has inspired me throughout the work. I acknowledge this obligation with gratitude.

I am equally grateful to Shri Rasikbhai C.Parikh, Director,B.J.Institute of Research and Learning,Ahmedabad, for not only directing me to M.S.University of Baroda to make it my alma Mater for doctoral studies but advising me on important matters concerning the thesis. I thankfully acknowledge his elderly advice with deep respect.

I thank here the well-known Vaidyaraj Shri Bapalalbhai, Ex-Principal,Nazar Ayurvedic College,Surat for his interest in the thesis and for his help in supplying me with useful reading material and for giving several suggestions.

Last but not the least, I thank all the friends and well-wishers who assisted me enthusiastically from the beginning to the end. I specially remember here the library facilities given by Shri Dalsukhbhai Malvania, the Director, L.D. Bhartiya Sanskrit Vidyamandir, the librarians of Smt. Hansa Mehta Library, the Gujarat University Library, Oriental Institute Library and cannot forget the helpful typing and other assistance by Shri B.D. Mistry.

S.M.DESAI

~~~~~